Do m.; the C of German music. The Italian names of the notes are associated by tradition with Guido, or Cuttonio, of Arezzo in the eleventh century. The story is that when eight years old he was placed in the Benedictine monastery of Pomposa where he learned to sing in Canto fermo, or Gregorian chant, the only kind of melody then used in churches. It would appear that the training was very hard on account of the difficulty in familiarising pupils with the intonation of sounds, which was due to confusion in the notes, and to meet this inconvenience he sought for a means of instituting a rule or scale. He noticed that in the chant used in singing the Latin hymn to St. John composed by Paul the Deacon the first syllables of the six half-lines formed by their intonation an ascending diatonic progression. These syllables were ut, re, mi, fa, sol, la, and came from the following stanza:

"Ut queant laxis—Resonare fibris
Mitra gestarum—Famule tuorum
Solve polluti—Labi reatum
Sancte Iohannes."

The present Do is modified from Du, a reversal of Ut, Do being a form better adapted for the natural production of the voice. Guido having invented the six notes, La Maïre a century later added the seventh note Si, which stands for the Sa of Sancte.

Diez accordingly sets out the series of meanings reservoir, ditch, edge of a ditch, that which holds the water in a cask, i.e. the stave, as well as the Italian sense of stripe (Litré). But it seems more likely that, as Körtling suggests, there are two origins for the words, one the Gr. δογῆ, giving the sense of "stave," the other the Low German dobba that of "ditch."

☞ "The verbs Dovere, Potere and Volere take the auxiliary in compound tenses belonging to the verb they govern, thus:—Ho dovuto concedergli tutto quello che mi ha chiesto: Avrebbe dovuto dare il buon esempio: Non han voluto mantenere la promessa, because the verbs Concedere, Dare, Mantenere are transitive and conjugated accordingly with Avere; similarly, Non ho potuto dormire, Ho dovuto, or voluto sedere in terra, because Dormire and Sedere are amongst those intransitive verbs which take Avere as their auxiliary. But:—Son dovuti venir soli, La cosa non era potuta riuscire, È voluto partir subito, because Venire, Riuscire, Partire, are intransitives conjugated with Essere.

"In the case of reflective and reciprocal verbs, if the reflective pronoun is affixed to the verb, the auxiliary used with Dovere, Potere, Volere, is Avere, as Tu non avresti dovuto affiggerti cosl. But if it is divided from its own verb and precedes Dovere, Potere or Volere, these verbs are then conjugated with Essere, as Tu non ti saresti dovuto affiggere cosl" (Rigutini and Fanfani, Lingua italiana parlata).

Fánfan-o m., *-a f.; malicious bab-bler. †pilot fish, v. Pilota.

Etym. dup. Two suggestions are forthcoming, (1) that of Diez, making the word cognate to Fanfarone, boaster, v. Fanfara, (2) that of Storm, who classes it with Fanfaluca, along with the dialectal forms Fanfulla (Milanese), Fánfola (Comascan), Fanfonj (Sicilian), meaning joke, <Gr. πομπόλυξ, bubble, through fanfóllo*, fanfóllo* (cp. Ségola, Ségale, <L. scéale), Fanfano (cp. Modano, <L. modulium). By a further change (with a parallel in Cétero, <Cecino, swan) Storm would obtain Fanfero, and perhaps Vanvera, either under attraction from vano or from simple change in pronunciation. He adduces the word Sfanfanare, q.v. in loco, in support of his hypothesis. But all this, as Körting says, is not very convincing, and Diez's assumption of an imitative base is decidedly preferable.

Fánfara f.; i. military band. 2. military music.

Etym. Fr. fanfare of unkn. origin. Diez surmised an imil. L. fanfa*, meaning primarily the blare of a trumpet, and so a noisy blusterous proceeding, a swaggering and boasting, with derivatives old Spanish fanfa, Span. fanfarria (> Fr. fanfare, a flourish of trumpets), Span. fanfaron (> Fr. fanfaron, boaster), Span. fanfarrón, to play the bravo, Portug. fanfardo. These words, however, are traced by Spanish dictionaries to an Arabic fanfhara, boastful.

Ety. "According to Diez < fiutare* (contracted later to fiutare) for fiutare*, < L. flatus, breath, a form bordering on fiutare, freq. of flare (past part. flatus), to blow. This would make Fiutare stand to Fiutare like Annusare to Naso. Ascoli on the other hand, more happily, while keeping to the same radical base, traces it to a blt. fiutare*, freq. of fiutare*, formed upon fiavor*, which he deduces from the Calabrian hiavunnu, scent" (Pianigiani). Florio has fiuto, "sent, smell (also flute)." This Ital. fiuto may have been borrowed from O. Fr. fuite (Mid. E. fewte, feute), the scent or trace of an animal's flight, < L. fugulus, flight, < fugere. See fuite in Littré and feute in the New English Dict.

Flōsculo m.; (bot.) floret of a composite flower.

Flōtta f.; fleet. — attiva o in esistenza, fleet in being. * = Frotta, troop.

Etyim. Borrowed from Fr. flotte, a word first used in the sense of "fleet" in the 16th century. "Flote in old French like the corresponding Romance words, Span. flota, Portug. frota, Ital. flotta, frotta, means multitude, < L. fluctus, wave, taken fig. for abundance, with change of gender (It. has also the masculine form flotto, frotto). The word for fleet in old French is not flotte, but estoire; the expression flotte de nefis, assemblage of ships, is like flotte de gens, assemblage of people. But the Germanic languages have a word for assemblage of ships, Dutch vloot, Swedish flotta, A.S. flot, E. fleet. This last has furnished directly the word flote as appears above" (written in a quotation given from Du Cange, sub Avirunatus, Après avironna le suppliant et mena la flote du côté du port), "and it is certain, as Diez observes, that the Germanic words operated to give flotte, multitude, its present meaning of fleet" (Littre).

Flōttare ind. flōtto (Fr. flotter, to float, < flot, wave, < L. fluctus); to float a raft of timber down a river. Aff. -atōre, raftsmen.

Flu-ire (Fluere) ind. -isco, perf. fluì fluisti fluì, paris. fluente fluito; to flow.

Etyim. A literary introduction < L. fluere, instead of the pop. Scorrere. Fluere is prob. for fluigere*, cp. the perf. fluì, akin to Gr. φλῦν, to bubble over (root bhleg, to overflow, cp. Liddell and Scott, sub φλῦν), but not to E. flow, which is akin to Gr. ῥέω, to float, root pleu. The primary meaning therefore of fluere was "to gush out," not "to float along."

Fluōre m.; 1. (chem.) fluorine. 2. (med.) discharge. 3. (min.) fluor-spar, fluoride of lime. *1. in old chemistry, liquidity. 2. in pl., gases. 3. — pietroso, crystalline deposit of any kind.

Etyim. L. fluor, a flowing in med. diarrhoea. The term was applied by the alchemists to all mineral acids, because of their fluidity, but fluor-spar owes its name to the facility with which it fuses up at a red heat with silica, sulphates of lime and barium, and some other infusible substances, into homogeneous masses.

Fluor-escēnte, -escēnza; as E. -idrico; hydro-fluoric (acid). ina f.*; fluor-spar. -uō m.; fluoride.

G

G m., sometimes f.; pronounced Gi. It interchanges with b (Beppe or Geppe, Cambiare or Cangiare), c (Lagrime or Lacrima, Federigo or Federico), d (Diaccio or Ghiaccio, Vedo or Veggo), z (Palazzo or Palagio, Prezzo or Pregio), and v (Parvolo or Pargolo); gh interchanges with gl (Mugghiare or Mugliare); sometimes it disappears (Gire or Ire, Sciaurato or Sciaurato). Abbreviations: G.B., Giambattista; G.C., Gesù Cristo, Giulio Cesare or Gran Croce d' un ordine cavalleresco; G.D., Giandomenico, Granduca or Granduchessa; G.F., Gianfrancesco; G.G., Giangiacomo; G.M., Genio Militare (Royal Engineers), Giammaria or Gran Maestro dell' Ordine; G.P., Giampietro or Giampaolo; V.G., Vostra grandezza or Verbi gratia; S.G., Sua Grazia; P.G., Padre generale; G., Giorno, Giovedì, or Genere.

In ancient Rome, as a number, G meant 400, or with a bar over it, 400,000.

On Prussian coins it indicates the mint at Stettin; on French, that of Poitiers, and on Swiss of Geneva.

G is hard as in English before a, o, u, soft before e, i, unless an h is interposed. Formerly g was uniformly soft unless followed by h; thus Agio was written Ago, and the present Ago was written Agho. It is silent before li (with a few exceptions, e.g. Negligere and words beginning Gli-) but softens the l, thus Togli is pronounced Tolyee. It is also silent before n and softens it, thus Sogno is pronounced So-nyo. An initial G takes Lo, Gli, Uno for the article, Lo gnomone, Lo gnorri.

Guatter-o (Guatato, Guattaro) m.; kitchen-attendant. Aff. -a f., -accio pegg.

Etyim. Cogn. blt. guattarus, derived by Du Cange from Ital. guatare, with the meaning of "inspector," but more probably < M.H.G. watāre*, which Caix attributes to O.H.G. watan, to look at, giving again, as above, the meaning of "inspector." It is, however, better referred to the Germanic root wat, seen in Gothic wato, water, O.H.G. wasser (> Germ. Wasser), v. Skeat, sub Water, Wet. This makes the original sense of the word to be washer-up.

Guattire ind. -isco (imit., cp. Guare); of hounds, to give tongue.

†Guatto; i. = Quatto, crouched. ii. as sb., goby, v. Giozzo.

Guazza f. (v. Guazzare, etym.); 1. morning mist, heavy dew. 2. fig. trifle, in comparison with what is required.

Abbreviations: V.L., voce latina; L.C., luogo citato; P.Q.L., pose questa lapide; L.Mm., Le loro Maestà; L.I.A.A., Le loro Altezze; L. it., Lire italiane; L. st., Lire sterline. In ancient inscriptions L may be Lare, Ludi, Liberto, Legione, Lucio. As a numeral the Roman L is 50, the Greek L 30, or with a bar, 30,000.

†Dialectically L is changed into n, as Antro for altro; or substituted for r, as Er cardo for il caldo.

La f.; def. article (L. illa). As an enclitic it is used after many verbs and has to be translated by supplying the substantive required. Svignarsela, sc. la via or la casa, to clear out. Farcela, sc. vita, to live. In quel posto ce la fa abbastanza bene, life there is comfortable enough. L' ha fatta grossa, sc. la mancanza or la sciocchezza, he has committed a gross fault. It also stands for Lei, or Ella, she, her, or, according to the Italian mode, you. La smetta, la mi faccia il piacere, will you be good enough to leave off? And pleonastically L' è lei la cattiva, you are unkind.

La m.; (mus.) the A of the German or English notation. For the origin of the term, v. Do.

Là (L. illac); there. Sta là da S. Frediano, he lives close to the church of St F. Quando lo vidi l' ultima volta s' era là di carnevale, the last time I saw him was somewhere about the Carnival. Più là, farther away. Là oltre, farther on. Di là, into the other room. Di là da, the other side of. Un milione che è di là da venire, a million that is never likely to come. Mondo di là, the other world. Rimanere al di là, to remain over there. Gli è al di là dell' impossibile, it is beyond the bounds of possibility. Più di là che di qua dal dispiacere, almost beside oneself with grief. Non andò tanto in là che lo fermarono, he did not go very far before he was caught. Voltati in là, in a moment, before you have time to turn round. Si mise a dire che era un qui, che era un là, we began calling him this, that, and the other. Fatevi in là, go farther off. Tirare in là, to go on for a long time. Mandare in là, to delay, e.g. the fulfilment of some pledge. Ne vuol saper più là che non sia permesso, he wants to know too much. In là cogli anni, advanced in years. È un pezzo in là colla cantata, she is an old person to be still singing. Di là da bene, superlatively well. D' ora or Da oggi in là, henceforward. Dall' in là v' è mio, beyond that point it is my property. Dall' in là non so altro, beyond that I can say nothing. Non farsi d' una cosa né in qua né in là, to be indifferent to it. Andar là là, to go very slowly. Là là, in health or business, so so. Va là, patience! Se rendessero almeno una parte di quel che pigliano, va là, if they would restore at any rate some of what they take, one might put up with it. Là per là, instantly, v. Li (3).

Etyim. O.H.G. liso* (a word inferred from an actual lisci, gently), whence Germ. leise, soft. But the Gr. λασρός, flat, may possibly be the origin of the Italian word, cp. Span. liso, flat. The Fr. lisse is probably borrowed from Italian. Having regard to the vowel (u = Romance i, i = a) Diez prefers the Germanic derivation; this also agrees more exactly with the meaning, since Liscio means soft rather than merely smooth, whilst λασρός generally refers to a rock or cliff. Nor is it very likely that such a word would pass from Greek to Italian without the intervention of Latin.

Etyim. L. maccus, fool, the clown of the Atellane plays, v. Pulcinella; Walde regards this word as borrowed from Greek, but Körting rejects this view and holds that maccus properly meant a mash, <root mac, to soften, v. Macerare. The Ital. Macco is strong evidence for this theory, the transition of meaning from pudding to pudding-headed fool being one which would readily occur. Cp. infra, Maciulla, etym.

(B); = Macca, plenty, abundance.

Etyim. Perhaps the same word as Macco (A), but the transition of meaning (that which is squashed down—that which is supplied plentifully) is not very likely and a Germanic origin is more probable, viz. < some derivative of the root magh, to be strong, v. Skeat, sub May (1); there is however no clear link; the link suggested by Pianigiani is O.H.G. manca (> Germ. manche, many, > blt. manca*, > Ital. Etyim. unkn. Körting touches upon it in two different articles, as follows. Art. 6390 "Murreus, < murra, myrrh tree, seems to be the source of It. mogio, dispirited; Span. murrio, stupid in the head, > murria, heaviness in the head. As regards the transition in meaning it is to be observed that vinum murratum means wine of a bitter flavour doctored with myrrh, so that murreus could readily pass into the sense of 'drunk upon wine treated with myrrh, stupid, heavy in the head.' Diez does not suggest any origin for murria." Art. 6408 "musino -nem (μουσιν), a Sardinian animal, presumably the mouflon (Pliny 8. 199), though the word seems also to have meant an entire ass; this, according to Calz, is the original of It. miccio, ass, Lombard missa, Friuli dial. muss. This however is a very unlikely theory; these words, together with many Italian adjectives, mostly dialectal, such as It. mogio, muso, Neapolitan muscio, matto, Ferrarese most etc., form a large group, going back to L. muscus, new, of the character of unfertile grape juice, viscid, cp. Schuchardt, Roman. Etyim. 1. p. 60." None of all this, this however, seems very convincing.

Etyim. dub. Diez marks the accent inaccurately as Móllica and traces the word to L. mollis, soft. Caix suggests derivation < lit. molecula, v. Molléca; cp. Fr. mie, crumb, < L. mica, little bit, first specialised into little bit of bread-crumb, and then extended into crumb, the soft part of bread, generally, whilst a dim. miette was formed for bread-crumb. In Italian, by a reverse process, Mollica may have been developed as a back-formation out of Mollicola regarded as a diminutive; the change however, molecula > Mollicola, may be due to the influence of mollis, this word being undoubtedly the source of provincial (Murcian) Span. molla, the crumb of bread; the Castilian word for this is miga, which is of course < L. mica, like Fr. mie.

☞ In the Middle Ages time was reckoned by the Canonical Hours, v. Canonico, and an hour continued to be in Italian, as in Latin, the twelfth part of the time from sunrise to sunset, or from sunset to sunrise. But when clocks were invented it became the twenty-fourth part of the time from midnight to midnight and such expressions as Il tocco, = i p.m., Le dieci, = 10 a.m., then arose, so that, though La decima ora del giorno was from 3 to 4 p.m., Le dieci never meant anything but ten o'clock, and expressions like La decima ora del giorno dropped out of Italian as out of English. In the old system the complete day of twenty-four hours was considered to begin at sunset, and this mode of reckoning time still lingers in phrases such as Suonano le ventiquattro, the evening Ave Maria is being rung.

Etym. Diez, finding no Latin form of this word though it occurs both in French and Spanish, thought it was of Spanish origin, etc. from the prepositions para, con, meaning "in comparison with," e.g. la criatura para con el criador, the creature in comparison with the creator, whence el para con, corrupted into paragon, as a sb., as in E. "the why and the wherefore" for "the motive." But the verb Paragonare answers to the Gr. παράκειναι, to rub against a wheelstone, ἀκόνειν, and the meaning "to compare" springs very readily from that of testing. If both derivations are correct it is a curious instance of a word with two meanings so much akin and with origins so different. The Spanish derivation, however, is against history, since the word occurs in Italian at an earlier date than in Spanish, see Murray, New Engl. Dict., sub Paragon.
